General J. E. Johnston. We publish this morning the letter of General Jourston, stating briefly his views of principles and policy in accepting the position of nominee for Congress of the Conservative party of the Richmond district. It is very brief and can hardly be objected to in the district, if we understand the publie feeling, as we conjecture we decidedly

We like the unhesitating manner in which the General proclaims his party relations. He stands firm there. Indeed, on every point he touches he is as frank and positive as it is his nature to be.

So with his "confession of faith" he sets out upon the campaign, which we presage will be altogether prosperous and cordial. How can the Richmond district fail to applaud and approve a Virginian bero who never stained the escutchcon of the Old Dominion, but whose every deed in his military life has helped to embellish her fame? In three wars be has borne himself so as to win honor for himself and renown for his native State-attesting by eleven wounds his valor and devotion to duty.

The letter of policy and principles will add pleasure to the performance of the act of voting for the old hero which will be remembered by every voter who gives a vote for the illustrious man as an incident of his life that will be recited with pride to the end of his days.

The Sixth Congressional District.

The telegraphic news in yesterday's Dis patch announcing the nomination by acela mation of John Randolph Tucker for reelection from the Sixth congressional district afforded general satisfaction to the public. Mr. Tucker is a true Virginia statesman, and he possesses an amount of ability and personal and moral respect and force that make him not only to be admired but to be implicitly trusted. He stands as one of the ablest, if not the very ablest man in the House of Representatives, and Virginia may therefore be proud of him.

It is very gratifying that the nomination of Mr. Tucker was effected with such promptness and unanimity. It had been feared that there might be some disagreement as to the opinions of the Convention upon public policy, and that this disagreement might retard the nomination. We had not thought such an event probable, and the prompt and harmonious action of the Convention shows that such a contingency was out of the question from the first; and it shows, what is better, that there is a general approval of Mr. Tucker's career as the representative of the district that will secure his reflection by an increased majority.

The first step of the Convention was the reference of resolutions to a committee. That committee reported to the body the following resolutions, which the chairman, Mr. Sale, stated were formulated from Mr. TUCKER'S Buckingham letter. They were adopted without debate, and with but two dissenting voices, and are as follows:

1. That we prefer Treasury notes of the States, commonly called greenbacks, to the present system of national-bank currency; and in our judgment, they should be substituted for national-bank notes as may be practicable.

2. That such Treasury notes should be made receivable for all dues to the Government, without distinction.

3. That we denounce the resumption clause of the act of 1875, and demand its repeal. We hold, with Samuel J. Tilden, that enforced resumption will create a new 4. That we are opposed to any further the special tax of ten per cent, on the circulation of State banks. We hold that such tax is unconstitutional, and that its repeal is right. 7. That we endorse the remonetization of silver, which will increase the currency at least $40,000,000 a year, and put greenbacks | To the Conservative Party of Virginia. on a par with gold and silver in all receipts by the Government.

Mr. Tucker was then nominated, and the nomination was, on motion of Mr. Goggix, made unanimous. Being informed by a committee of his nomination, he was brought before the Convention, and acknowledged to have the majority of the States Demothe honor conferred upon him in a speech cratic. The Congress. Where it is possible the Radical Virginian's report of it says:

He said that there was need of great policy of the Federal Government in grantthat had been made against him outside against him. He said he would visit all the counties in the district and give an account of his stewardship and express his views on public questions. The speech, which was a fine one, was loudly applauded,

The Convention then adjourned in that state of concord and happiness that were well secured by its good work. Mr. Tucker proposed to begin the campaign at once, and will conduct it with spirit. This "excludes conclusions" in one more district in a manner generally gratify-

Running Without a Nomination. Judge John T. Harris, in the Seventh district, who is "a readjuster in the cool," is running independent of a nomination. Indeed, the peerless competitors who have dashed boldly at him-the immaculate Mas-

Mr. Can-than they sell must come to poverty, and all HOUN, whose name has been looked to as expedients to raise prices will avail nothing authority by greenback advocates, uttered against the final results. If Virginia dein 1837 advice that is as good to-day as it was then. Speaking of distress then existing, he said:

"I am of the opinion that the Governnent can do but little in the way of relief, nd that it is a case which must be mainly left to the constitution of the patient, who, thank God, is young, vigorous, and robust. with a constitution sufficient to sustain and evercome the severest attack. The distress of the country consists in its indebtedness, and can only be relieved by payment of its debts. To effect this, industry, frugality, economy, and time are necessary. I rely more on the growing crop-on the cotton, rice, and tobacco of the South-than on all he projects or devices of politicians."

This was the truth then, as it is the truth now. Government and people owe money. The people have been most unfortunate in their heavy losses, and it will take a great deal of economy and industry to relieve them from the pressure that is upon them. But while we say, with Mr. Calhoun, that the Government can do but little in the way of relief, we concur with him in the view that whatever it can do should be done. Yet it is a great error of the people to be looking to the Government for relief. A people that commit that error will learn to their cost the danger of relying upon the Government. It will surely turn out that more aid is expected than can be afforded. Expectation invites to apathy, and more is lost to the people from self-indulgence than can ever be obtained from the Government. One of the greatest of virtues is independence-independence of spirit and independence of manhood. That will achieve independence of condition and all the pride and comfort that belong to it. Government in its administration may do much to promote public convenience and facilitate business, and that is what all wise administrations will secure to the people. Further than that, Government can do no great things; and it is damaging to public energy and virtue to inculcate the idea that the Government ought or will help to relieve that public distress which comes from causes that have done their work and are beyond recall.

The Virginia Delegation. We can now name to our satisfaction the Virginia delegation in the next Congress: First District : R. L. T. BEALE. Second District: Jour Goode, Jr. Third District: JOSEPH E. JOHNSTON. Fourth District: WILLIAM E. HINTON, Jr. Fifth District: GEORGE C. CABELL. Sixth District : J. RANDOLPH TUCKER. Seventh District: John T. Harris. Eighth District : EPPA HUNTON. Ninth District: J. B. RICHMOND.

All Conservatives, and we suppose they will all be elected. There can be hardly a doubt about any one in the list, unless it be pretty strongly Republican.

A MISTAKE.-Mc. E. S. GREGORY telegraphs from Lynchburg to the Petersburg Appeal:

"General Early and Mr. Button, opponts of the [Daniell resolutions, mad able fight to have the nomination made without instructions, but the Convention decided, and the Daniel resolutions were adopted with but two dissenting votes." The fact is that the DANIEL resolutions were ignored. The chairman of the committee that reported the resolutions stated expressly that they were formulated from Mr. Tucken's letter, as every reader can see for himself they were. There is no nonsense in these resolutions about paying off contraction of the currency, which has been greatly injurious to the industries of in greenbacks, nor about issuing billions of irredeemable trasb.

The coming congressional election is one of the most important since the war. The presidential election may not be decided by the people, and the House of Representatives will elect. At the present time the thirty-eight States are equally divided, and it is a matter of greater interest than ever especially where the Democrats are divided and opposition candidates seeking seats in candidates will carry the day between the Democratic candidates, it is well for Conservatives to see what might be the result. But only a beginning of the charges which had been made has been made. The success of the party has been made. The success of the party is necessary to relieve the State of Virginia of the tobacco tax, which is crushing out both planter and manufacturer. The exports exceed the imports near three hundred millions of dollars, and prosperity is apparent at the North. In the South it will never come so long as everything is brought from the North. Provisions, manufactures, and the tobacco tax will continue to drain the little money from Virginia, and congressional independence cannot show how they can bring a remedy for the evils under which we daily groan and will suffer for years to come. The only help for southern people, so far as national laws affect us, must come from a solid Democratic delegation uniting with the northern Democratic party to remove the tobacco tax, and in many other ways to aid in resuscitating the C. General Johnston's Views on Certain Public Questions. To the Conservative Voters of the Third Congressional District: I announced to the Nominating Convention of the district, immediately before its adjournment that in a letter of acceptance, expected to be called upon to write, my opinions on the questions now interesting the public should be freely given. I have not been called upon for such a letter, but have received from various parts of the district very earnest expressions of wishes to learn my opinions on those questions, especially that of finance.

I hold that the first of them in importance is that of the maintenance of the Democratic party of the United States in its integrity; for we of the South owe to that party our release from the condition of con-Constitution we now enjoy; and if we maintain it undivided it will probably acquire the control of both the legislative and executive branches of the Government, and introduce honesty, economy, and strict construction of the Constitution into the Government, and restore prosperity to the

The Democratic Platform as to the National Banks. [Extract from the speech of Senster Thurman a Athens, Ohio, August 31st.]

I now proceed to the next objection, and that is in these words: To substitute greenbacks for national-bank notes would compel the banks to call in their loans and wind up, and entail immense injury upon the ousiness of the country. To this I reply : that to retire these notes from circulation would not compel the banks to wind up We have thousands of private bankers who issue no circulation and yet do a profitable business, and so the national banks could were their circulation retired.

But I admit that were Congress to compel them to retire their circulation instantaneously the result would be disastrous. But our platform contemplates no such thing. It proposes no hardship and no harsh measures, either to the bankers or their customers. It proposes gradual not instantaneous substitution of greenbacks for national-bank notes. How this shall be done, in looking to the detail, must be left to the wisdom of Congress. That Congress would pursue a prudent and subservient course in effecting the substitution there is
